Notes for Edward James Yeo:

Edward James and his wife Kathleen were like grandparents to my three children. Edward was a lay preacher at the Methodist church in Bradenstoke and my children all attended the Sunday School from 1970 - 1976. He was a wheelwright like his father and the house at The Banks was like a museum. In the gardens were his workshops and although a man of very few words he had a heart of gold and tremendous patience.

Notes for Kathleen Mary Swan:

Kathleen was a true Christian. She never had any children of her own but all the children in Bradenstoke were hers. She spent many hours teaching them to knit and sew, and every mother's day she would take the children across the fields belonging to The Banks to gather primroses and violets. The children would then make posies for their mothers. She never drove a car, but cycled everywhere on her bicycle. She herself had been a teacher at the local school in Lyneham and when she retired she became a school governor of the school. My daughter was the last one of our family to see her alive and went to visit her in the 1980's. She was then nearly blind from cataracts but still as cheerful as ever. She told, Debi, my daughter, that they had to wait to get married until Edward's mother died, by which time they were too old to have children. I assume this was because of the wording of the will.

My one regret is that when we moved from Wiltshire to Norfolk in 1976, both Kathleen and Edward wanted to be godparents to my children and I refused, wanting them to make their own choices when they were old enough. However, both will always be remembered by my children and many others for their devotion and kindness.

He married (1) Grete in Toronto, Canada. She was born in Denmark. He married (2) Hilary Pagniez 1954.

Notes for Leslie James Yeo:

In 1951, a young actor-manager (Leslie Yeo), left post-war England -- and, with $30 in his pocket, brought 13 professional actors and a scenic designer across the Atlantic to the closest point on the North American shore -- St. John, Newfoundland. There, without sponsor or subsidy, he staged 26 different plays in 26 weeks and ended up the season with a profit. Over the next six years he firmly established Canada's first fully professional commercial regional theater. This is the story of that historic theatrical adventure its crises and its triumphs and the many lives it changed. Documents the rapid growth of the repertory theater movement and the dying days of the Music Hall in Britain* London Theatre Company

In early October of 1951, eleven actors sailed from Liverpool on the HMS Nova Scotia and arrived in Newfoundland to form one of the first professional, resident theatre companies in St. John's. Rehearsing on the ship as they crossed the Atlantic, the London Theatre Company would go on to do over 107 productions between 1951 and 1957 - becoming the first weekly, professional, repertory theatre company in Canada. The London Theatre Company performed 26 plays every season, totalling 182 performances over six years.

The London Theatre Company was the brain child of British actor and theatre manager Leslie Yeo, who had come to St. John's in 1948 to perform with the Alexandra Company, and who became entranced with Newfoundland. The company's first season brought professional theatre to nearly 7000 audience members. Yeo wanted the London Theatre Company to be a successful commercial venture, permanently situated in St. John's and using the city as a base from which to tour both the Atlantic provinces and the rest of Canada.

In the 550-seat auditorium at Bishop Feild College, the Company did plays such as Rookery Nook, a British farce, Ten Little Indians by Agatha Christie, an adaptation of Brontë's Wuthering heights, George Bernard Shaw's Pygmalion, Oscar Wilde's The Importance of Being Earnest, and classic works by Noel Coward: standard British professional repertory theatre material, but it was undeniably popular for the first few years. In his autobiography, A Thousand and One First Nights (1998), Yeo writes that:

We were a little heavy on farce perhaps but drama, mystery, light comedy, broad comedy, romance and a tinge of the sensational were all represented, topped off by a Shakespeare and a musical revue to finish the season. (117)

According to Yeo, St. John's audiences loved farce and heavy drama "rather like any repertory town" in England (150).

The troupe of British actors Yeo brought with him in the first year included Oliver Gordon (who co-financed the venture with Yeo and Harry Reynolds), Rosemary Rogers, Sheila Huntington, Geoffrey Lumsden, Paul Williamson, Yeo's wife Hilary Vernon, and Gladys Richards. Richards was a native-born Newfoundlander who had been working in the theatre in England. All the performers had extensive experience on the London stage as well as in repertory companies elsewhere. Yeo also brought his own set designer (George Paddon-Foster) and stage manager. That stage manager was John Holmes, who stayed in St. John's after the company disbanded and continued working in the theatre as well as writing for The Telegram and broadcasting with CBC Radio. The company of actors would change over the next five years, but Yeo, Vernon, Gordon, and Holmes stayed with the London Theatre Company for its tenure.

Yeo also used whatever assistance he could get from the St. John's community. Ira Butler, the groundsman at Bishop Feild became the company's stage hand and an accomplished sound effects technician, and Art Noseworthy became the company electrician. Volunteers from Bishop Feild College (students and alumni) and from the Feildian Athletic Grounds Association worked as ushers, cloakroom attendants, and canteen helpers (the money from the canteen and the cloakroom helped pay off the Association's bowling alleys).

Money was always a concern for Yeo and the company: some seasons they had to borrow furniture from people's homes to furnish the stage. In other years local businesses, such as Lever Brothers, would buy up blocks of tickets to keep the company afloat. The back room of Baird's department store became the company's carpentry and paint shop. Bowrings provided space for the ticket booth: prices ranged from .50 to $2.00 and a pair of seats for the entire season was $96.00 - about $800.00 in 2001 money.

The first season in 1951 was a success. The top box-office hit was Tennessee Williams's A Streetcar Named Desire, but that play only barely surpassed the popularity of the Saturday matinee performances for children. The season-ending musical revue, titled Screech, sealed the decision by Yeo and the company to not only return to St. John's in the fall of 1952, but also to expand the London Theatre Company's activity with a tour to Halifax. It was Yeo's hope that St. John's would become the hub for tours across Atlantic Canada and into Ontario.

The tours to Halifax, Moncton, Sydney, London and Niagara Falls, from 1952 to 1956 went well, but were never as successful as the St. John's performances. The demands of travel forced Yeo to shorten the St. John's season (in 1956 the Company only did nine performances at Bishop Feild), and it became increasingly difficult to get actors to sign on for what was a lengthy and tiring touring season. These reasons, combined with the increasing influence and popularity of television, caused Yeo to decide to close the company after the 1957 season. The London Theater Company's final performance was Screech - The Last Drop on April 3, 1957 in St. John's.

Johnny Belinda, ca. 1952.

After breaking box-office records in St. John's in 1952, Johnny Belinda, starring Hilary Vernon and Charles Jarrott, did not fare very well the next year in Halifax.

Some of the London Theatre Company stayed in Canada after the company closed down to develop long-running theatre careers. John Holmes remained in St. John's acting, directing, and writing. "Gilly" and Moya Fenwick, who joined the company in 1954, headed to Ontario and the summer theatre festivals there. Leslie Yeo would continue his career at Stratford and Niagara-on-the-Lake. The Company provided professional repertory theatre to enthusiastic St. John's audiences for six years, and when Yeo returned to St. John's in March 2001 to deliver a lecture on the London Theater Company's history he and his players were still remembered.
